How To Choose the Right Westfield Tree Service

Factors like licensing and services offered are important considerations when choosing a tree removal company. We go over several of these key factors below.

Vet the Company's Qualifications

Tree service companies should have insurance to protect their workers and customers. Some examples of policies include professional liability, general liability, and workers' compensation insurance. The policies should mention tree work coverage specifically otherwise, you might be responsible for any damage or injuries that occur on your property.

Tree removal doesn't require any mandatory national certifications. However, companies might have a certified arborist on staff to perform inspections. Arborists learn proper care, preservation, and maintenance techniques to protect the tree's health. These specialists receive voluntary certifications through the International Society of Arboriculture (ISA). Although having a certified arborist is not a requirement, it's an added benefit.

Get Quotes From Multiple Companies

We recommend getting quotes from multiple companies to help determine the best deal. This way, you can compare things like timelines, included services, and service fees.

Confirm the Company Performs Residential Tree Services

Residential tree removal companies have fewer restrictions than commercial ones. Commercial companies work on large commercial properties and therefore must follow certain local ordinances. For this reason, we recommend hiring a company that specializes in residential tree services.

Request a Tree Risk Assessment

A tree risk assessment (TRA) assesses for tree failure. Your tree removal professional will visually inspect a tree and its branches to determine the risk of breakage. A TRA is done to help minimize the risk of damage to your property or harm to workers.

Certified arborists are typically the ones to conduct TRAs. Sometimes there's an additional fee involved, while other times the assessment is included for free with services. Contact your tree removal company and make sure you have a TRA completed before starting work.

Ask About Stump Removal

Companies can remove stumps with special equipment or by hand. Neglected stumps will decompose and can attract pests and disease. Ask your tree removal company if stump removal is included with its services. Costs vary between $107 to $786, with the average Westfield homeowner paying around $500.

How Much Does It Cost To Remove A Tree?

Tree removal services cost $488-$2,649, with an average cost of around $1,001. Several factors influence the price, like tree health, project size, and tree size and type. Emergency services cost more, running at around $2,074. Companies may charge per acre if multiple trees need to be removed. Your price will also increase if the trees have a higher future risk and need additional safety precautions, equipment, or labor.
